TIGHE E. WOODS, Housing Expediter

PETITION

To the Honorable Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioners, Gerald F. Cobleigh and Slawsby Real Estate Co., Inc. pray for a writ of certiorari for review of the final decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, dated January 26, 1949, in the above entitled cause.

STATEMENT

These are actions brought by the Acting Housing Expediter of the office of the Housing Expediter to enjoin petitioners from demanding and receiving rents alleged to exceed legal maximum rents and to recover judgments for the plaintiff Housing Expediter and/or orders for restitution to the petitioners' tenants in accordance with the provisions of Section 925 (e) of the Price Control Extension Act of 1946 (R. 6, 7, 45, 46). Orders for restitution to petitioners' tenants in the amounts of $328.00 and $1,514.00 and judgments for plaintiff Housing Expediter for single damages of $328.00 and $1,514.00 were entered by the District Court

(R. 17-19, 55-56) in accordance with the opinions of that court (R. 11-17, 51-54) 75 F. Supp. 125, 75 F. Supp. 594 and were affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals (R. 67) in accordance with its opinion (R. 62-67) 172 F. 2d 167.

The petitioners are the owners and operators of an apartment building in Nashua, New Hampshire, containing thirty-two apartments. Certain rentals for these apartments were in effect on March 1, 1942, and continued in effect, under the provisions of the Rent Regulation for Housing issued under authority of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, up to and including June 30, 1946. On June 30, 1946, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and the Housing Regulation issued thereunder expired. During the period between July 1, 1946, and July 25, 1946, the petitioners caused to be served on each of the tenants notices, valid under the laws of the State of New Hampshire, to the effect that on the next rent date their rent was increased $2 per week. During the period from July 1 to July 25 twenty-eight tenants commenced to pay weekly rentals $2 in excess of those which had been in effect during the period from March 1, 1942, through June 30, 1946. Petitioners continued to receive and the tenants in question to pay these increased rentals until the issuance of a restraining order by the District Court for the District of New Hampshire on March 12, 1947, (R. 9, 49).

At the trial in the District Court petitioners offered to prove:

(a) that the Price Administrator's agent examined the apartments at the request of the petitioners prior to the institution of this action and informed them that the rents as established between July 1, 1946, and July 25, 1946, were very reasonable and

(b) further stated to petitioners that the previous rent level had been so low that it had embarrassed the O.P.A. in considering other rents in that locality. This offer of proof was rejected. (R. 22-26)

STATUTE INVOLVED

Price Control Extension Act of 1946 (Public Law 548 approved July 25, 1946, 79th Congress, 50 USCA App. Section 901 a note) Section 18 (1):

The provisions of this Act shall take effect as of June 30, 1946 and

(2) all regulations, orders, price schedules and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 as amended * * * * and the Stabilization Act of 1942 as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946 * * * *. Provided further, that no act or transaction, or omission or failure to act, occurring subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of the enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a violation of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, or of any regulation or order, price schedule or requirement under either of such Acts. Provided further, that insofar as the provisions of this Act require the Administrator to make any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act.

REGULATIONS INVOLVED

Rent Regulation For Housing. Section 4 Maximum Rents. "Maximum rents (unless and until changed by the Administrator as provided in section 5) shall be:

(a) Rented on maximum rent date. For housing accommodations rented on the maximum rent date, the rent for such accommodations on that date.

“SECTION 1. Scope of this regulation -

(a) Housing and defense-rental areas to which this regulation applies. This regulation applies to all housing accommodations within each of the defense-rental areas and each of the portions of a defense-rental area (each of which is referred to hereinafter in this regulation as the 'defense-rental area'), which are listed in Schedule A of this regulation, except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section.

In Schedule A 'the maximum rent date' and 'the effective date of regulation' is given for each defense-rental area listed. * * * * Wherever the words 'the maximum rent date' or the words 'the effective date of regulation' are referred to in this regulation the dates given in Schedule A for the particular defense-rental area or portion of the defense-rental area in which the housing accommodations are located shall apply. * * * * "

QUESTION PRESENTED

The question presented is the proper construction and the constitutionality as construed, of Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act. The Court must determine whether that Act (1) purports to discriminate between existing contracts without adequate basis for the discrimination, (2) purports to encroach by legislative act upon the field of judicial power, and in either case, whether it is constitutional.

PETITIONERS' CONTENTIONS

The petitioners contend that the change in terms of the tenancy between petitioners and the twenty-eight tenants whose rentals increased between June 30, 1946, and July 25, 1946, was and continued to be an "act or transaction * * * * occurring subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the enactment of this Act" within the meaning of Section 18 (2) of the Price Control Extension Act of 1947. They contend that the rentals as changed continued to be in force and unaffected by that Act until changed by a general or special order of the Price Administrator or his successors in authority, and that no such order has been issued. They contend that a requirement that such order be issued was intended by the language. "Provided further, that insofar as the provisions of this Act require the Administrator to make any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the enactment of this Act". They do not contend that they acquired vested rights by the change in the terms of tenancy between June 30 and July 26, 1946, but that the rights then acquired could constitutionally be affected only by administrative determination subject to judicial review. An administrative consciousness of the correctness of this contention is shown by the issuance of an administrative order relative to security deposits.

Section 2 Paragraph (d) of the original Rent Regulation for Housing as amended provided:

"(d) Security deposits - - (1) General prohibition. Regardless of any contract, agreement, lease or other obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, no person on or after September 1, 1944, shall demand or receive a security deposit for or in connection with the use or occupancy of housing accommodations within the Defense-Rental Area or retain any security deposit received prior to or on or after September 1, 1944, except as provided in this paragraph (d). The term 'security deposit,' in addition to its customary meaning, includes any prepayment of rent except payment in advance of the next periodic installment of rent for a period no longer than one month but shall not include rent voluntarily prepaid subsequent to possession by a tenant under a written lease for his own convenience."

On July 26, 1946, the Administrator issued an order which took effect as Amendment 97 to the Rent Regulation for Housing (11 FR 8164, effective July 26, 1946) which provided as follows:

"(8) Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this paragraph (d), the demand, receipt, or retention of a security deposit contrary to such provisions between June 30, 1946, and July 25, 1946, shall not be a violation of this regulation; Provided, however, that the landlord shall refund such security deposit to the tenant within 30 days after July 25, 1946."

Petitioners contend that the proviso clause contemplated the issuance of a similar general or special order by the Administrator to be essential to roll back petitioners' legal maximum rent to the level of March 1, 1942, if such was the administrator's intention.

It is the further contention of the petitioners that if Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act of 1947 is construed as prohibiting, by legislative enactment, the continued collection of rentals in accordance with a change in the terms of a tenancy occurring between July 1, 1946, and July 25, 1946, in a Defense-Rental area said Section is unconstitutional as repugnant to the provisions of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

It violates the provisions of the Fifth Amendment by depriving petitioners of property without due process of law. First, it discriminates between landlords in defense rental areas and landlords in other areas without adequate basis for the discrimination. Second, it purports to effect by legislative enactment without providing for judicial review a change in the property rights of the appellants. If the petitioners' contract of tenancy were alterable only by administrative action, as they contend, petitioners would have an opportunity to obtain judicial review of the action taken by the administrator and be heard on the question of the fairness and necessity for the action taken or proposed. Such a change would be a change by due process of law. But the change by legislative fiat involves an invasion by the legislature of the judicial field. To allow Congress to roll back rents in some areas to one date, in some areas to another, and leave other rents unaffected without any provision for administrative or judicial determination of the necessity or fairness of the measure is to destroy the protection intended by the Fifth Amendment. It is submitted that Congress never intended to assert such power and that the construction of Section 18 contended for by the petitioners is the correct one.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The question presented by this case involves the proper construction, and the constitutionality as construed, of Federal legislation affecting the rights of a very large number of citizens of the United States. It raises a most important and significant question of the bounds of legislative power under the Constitution. It involves the deprivation of petitioners' valuable property rights without due process of law.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals ignored the significance in construing the statute of the order issued by the administrator with respect to security deposits. It assumed the constitutionality of the legislation as construed without considering the contention that as so construed its provisions were discriminatory and trespassed the sphere of judicial power. The proper administration of justice requires consideration of these questions and correction of the Circuit Court's errors.

PRAYER

WHEREFORE, your petitioners pray that a Writ of Certiorari may issue directed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit commanding that Court to certify and to send to this Court a full and complete record of all proceedings of said Court in the above entitled cause to the end that said cause may be reviewed and determined by this Court as provided by law.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIRST CIRCUIT

STATEMENT

Jurisdiction is conferred on the Court by U.S. Code Title 28 Revised, Section 1254. The facts are stated in the Petition (Pages 3 and 4)

SPECIFICATION OF EPRORS

(1) The Court below misconstrued the proviso clause of Section 18 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1947. It failed to give due consideration to the evidence of Congressional intention and administrative understanding that changes in the terms of a tenancy taking place between June 30, 1946, and July 26, 1946, should remain in force until changed by administrative order.

(2) The Court below failed to give due weight to the rule of law to the effect that if a statute is susceptible of two interpretations one of which would clearly be constitutional and the other of doubtful constitutionality the interpretation clearly constitutional should be adopted.

(3) The Act as construed by the Circuit Court of Appeals is unconstitutional in that it discriminates between persons similarly situated and having the same property rights without an adequate basis for the discrimination.

(4) The Act as construed by the Circuit Court of Appeals constitutes an improper assumption by Congress of judicial power.

ARGUMENT

The security deposit order (Amendment 97 to the Rent Regulation for Housing) as set forth in petitioners' contentions indicates the Price Administrator's understanding that administrative action on his part was necessary to set aside or remedy the effect of transactions taking place during the interim period June 30, 1946, to July 25, 1946. Likewise the second proviso clause indicates Congressional contemplation that orders would have to be issued by the administrator to re-establish maximum prices. It is the contention of the petitioners that both Congress and the administrator contemplated that the type of determination and exercise of judgment by the administrator which were required for the original establishment of maximum prices under the provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 (See Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U.S. 503, 88 L. Ed. 892) would have to be exercised anew before maximum prices as they existed before June 30, 1946, could be put into effect again, since an attempt by Congress to reinstate schedules previously in effect without providing for an administrative determination of the necessity and fairness for and of such prices, subject to judicial review, would be unconstitutional.

The contention that Congress intended by the second proviso clause in Section 18 of the Act to provide for renewed determinations by the administrator and judicial review thereof is supported not only by the fair import of the language employed, but by the familiar rule of law that "a statute must be construed if fairly possible so as to avoid grave doubts upon that score." Panama Railway Company v. Johnson, 68 L. Ed., 748 44 Sup. Ct. 391, 264 U.S. 375, and cases therein cited. It is submitted that this principle should guide this Court in the construction of Section 18 of the Act and the proviso clauses thereof.

It is also contended by the petitioners that Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act, if construed as the government contends it should be, is unconstitutional as discriminating between landlords in defense-rental areas and landlords in other areas without adequate basis. Those outside defense-rental areas are permitted to receive an adequate return on their property; those within defense-rental areas may not be; yet the Act fails to provide a method for correcting this discrimination. Such discrimination has been struck down in such cases as Mayflower Farms, Inc. vs. Ten Eyck, 56 Sup. Ct. 457; 297 U.S. 266, involving a discrimination between established dealers and those seeking to enter a field; Wilson vs. MacDonell, 265 F 432, Error dismissed 42 Sup. Ct. 46, 257 U.S. 665, involving a prohibition on eviction of tenants which discriminated unfairly in favor of owners of property unoccupied on the effective date of the regulation; and in Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co. v. McChord, 103 F 216

It is a fundamental principle of Constitutional Law of the United States that an undue invasion by any of the three major branches of Government, Executive, Judicial or Legislative upon the functions or prerogatives of another is improper. Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U.S. 472, 515, 26 L. Ed. 197, 205.

The present case wherein we are considering the power of Congress to assume a function ordinarily committed to the charge of an administrative agency would seem to find its closest analogy for determining the proper bound between the exercise of legislative, executive and judicial powers in the rate making cases, which involve legislative declaration of policy, administrative implementation and execution of the same, and judicial control of the effect of regulation on individual and corporate property rights; with all being requisites of due process of law for the protection of the rights thereby affected. In one of the most recent rate making cases before the Court, Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company v. United States, 298 U.S. 349, 56 Sup. Ct. 797, this question is treated at length. It was there held that Congress and its agent, the Interstate Commerce Commission, were without power to determine finally whether prescribed divisions on interstate hauls by more than one carrier were confiscatory to either carrier involved. The Court said, "Congress has no power to make final determination of just compensation or to prescribe what constitutes due process of law or its ascertainment." The Court further quoted with approval the following language from the decision in Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company v. Minnesota, 134

U.S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, "The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public is eminently a question for judicial investigation requiring due process of law for its determination. If a company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property and such deprivation takes place in the absence of an investigation by judicial machinery, it is deprived of the lawful use of its property and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself without due process of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States * * *. The due process clause assures a full hearing before the Court or other tribunal empowered to perform the judicial function involved. That includes the right to introduce evidence and have judicial findings based upon it."

Another field wherein proper division of function is held of great importance is that of takings by governmental authority. In Monongahela Navigation Company v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 13 Sup. Ct. 622, it was held that a statute attempting to require omission of a certain factor from consideration in determining the amount of compensation payable violated the Fifth Amendment. The Court said in substance that while Congress might properly determine as a matter of policy what property should be taken, the task of setting a fair value on the thing taken was strictly a judicial function, the method of performing which Congress had no right to control. These precedents seem peculiarly applicable to such legislation as that under consideration in this case. The March 1, 1942, rent is claimed by petitioners to be confiscatory. The statute and regulations here involved do affect property rights just as rate regulation does and with similar consequences if the level set by the administrative or legislative branch are inadequate. However, if petitioners inadequate rent were set by administrative action petitioners would have a right to review by the Emergency Court of Appeals for determination of the question of necessity and propriety for the administrative action establishing the maximum rent. The petitioners are deprived of this right and, therefore, of due process, if their maximum rent has been established by non-reviewable legislative enactment.

The government relies on the decision in Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U.S. 100, 91 L. Ed. 1368 and dicta in Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U.S. 503, 88 L. Ed. 892. It does not appear that the contention advanced by petitioners in this case was raised or discussed in Fleming v. Rhodes. The Appellees in that case are relied on the theory that they had acquired vested rights which neither legislative nor administrative action could divest them of. That contention is not made by petitioners here. The dicta in Bowles v. Willingham to the effect that Congress could properly set rent ceilings area by area throughout the nation in the same manner in which the price administrator did is of no more weight than the comment in the same opinion (Page 515 U.S., 903 L. Ed.) to the effect that if it attempted to do so Congress would be undertaking a task beyond its practical ability to perform. We submit that if the Court had considered the present contention it would have realized that for Congress to attempt to do so would be not only impractical but improper since the nature of the job to be performed, in setting rent ceilings based on varying dates in varying areas throughout the country which should take into due consideration economic factors present in different areas and which would be generally fair and equitable, requires the employment of more personnel with a more specialized knowledge of economics than the membership of Congress could be expected to contain. The proper procedure in this field as in the field of rate making and other specialized fields would appear to be laying down by Congress of a general policy and adequate standards and implementation of such policies and standards by a specialized administrative agency which agency when performing quasi-judicial functions would have its action subjected to judicial review.

Another basis of the decision in Bowles v. Willingham is the broad war powers of Congress to pass legislation which under other circumstances would be invalid as confiscatory.

It is submitted that on July 25, 1946, hostilities had come to an end and the war emergency which might have justified upholding a statute or regulation, normally invalid, in 1943 would not serve as justification for confiscatory legislation under 1946 conditions.

CONCLUSION

Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act of 1947, as properly construed, exempted the rent increase effected by petitioners during the period between June 30, 1946, and July 26, 1946, and its continued collection by petitioners until further administrative order from its operation by virtue of the proviso clause therein. If otherwise construed, Section 18 of that Act is unconstitutional.

Respectfully submitted,

NEIL TOLMAN

v.

TIGHE E. WOODS, Housing Expediter,
OFFICE OF THE HOUSING EXPEDITER

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinions of the District Court (R. 11, 51) are reported at 75 F. Supp. 125, 594. The opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 62) is reported at 172 F. 2d 167.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on January 26, 1949 (R. 67). The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed on April 6, 1949. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether the court below properly interpreted Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act of July 25, 1946, as having by its own force revived the provisions of the Rent Regulation for Housing which had been in effect on June 30, 1946 when the Emergency Price Control Act expired, thus making reissuance of that regulation by the Price Administrator unnecessary.

STATUTES AND REGULATIONS INVOLVED

The pertinent provisions of the Price Control Extension Act of 1946, 60 Stat. 664, 678 (note to 50 U.S.C. App. 901a) and the Rent Regulation for Housing (8 F. R. 7323) are set forth in the Appendix, infra, pp. 13-15.

STATEMENT

The petitioners are the owners and operators of an apartment building in Nashua, New Hampshire, within the Manchester Defense-Rental Area (R. 12, 52) and as such were, at the times here involved, subject to the Rent Regulation for Housing (8 F.R. 7323) which was issued pursuant to the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended and extended (56 Stat. 23; 58 Stat. 632; 59 Stat. 306; 50 U.S.C. App., 901 et seq.). Section 4 and Schedule A of the Regulation, infra, p. 15 established as the maximum rents on these apartments, the rents charged therefor on March 1, 1942, and these maximum rents continued in effect without change up to and including June 30, 1946. The Congress having failed to enact legislation for its further extension, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, expired by its own terms at midnight, June 30, 1946.

The Price Control Extension Act of 1946 was enacted on July 25, 1946 (60 Stat. 664). By Section 1 of that Act, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, was extended for a year by striking out the date "June 30, 1946" in Section 1(b) of the latter Act, and substituting "June 30, 1947." Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act, infra, pp. 13-14, contained the following provision pertinent to the case at bar:

(1) The provisions of this Act shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, and (2) all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control act of 1942, as amended * * *, and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946, * * * Provided further, That no act or transaction, or omission or failure to act, occurring subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a violation of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, or of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under either of such Acts * * *.

Between July 1, 1946 and July 25, 1946, the period during which price control was not currently in force and effect, petitioners served upon their tenants notices, which were valid under the laws of New Hampshire, to the effect that the rentals on their housing accommodations would be increased at the next rent date (R. 9). During this period, petitioners demanded and received from each of the tenants of the housing accommodations, $2.00 per week in excess of the maximum rent that had been in effect until rent control lapsed on June 30, 1946, and petitioners continued to demand and receive this additional rent until restrained from doing so by order of the District Court for the District of New Hampshire on March 12, 1947 (R. 9, 49).

On October 7, 1946, the Price Administrator (predecessor to respondent) filed a complaint in the District Court against petitioners under Section 205 of the Emergency Price Control Act, as extended, claiming that petitioners had overcharged their tenants an aggregate of $316 for the period July 26 to September 7, 1946 (R. 6). The complaint also prayed for equitable relief under Section 205(a) by way of injunction against continued violations, and for an order of restitution to tenants for the amounts of their respective overcharges. In addition, the complaint asked for judgment in favor of the United States in the amount of $948, or three times the amount of the overcharges, but provided that if restitution to the tenants should be granted by the Court, the prayer for judgment in favor of the United States might be considered as asking for twice the amount of the overcharges (R. 7). After trial of the issues, the District Court entered judgment in favor of the respondent which directed petitioners to make restitution to the tenants, and awarded single statutory damages in favor of the United States (R. 17). On appeal, the judgment of the District Court was affirmed by the Court of Appeals (R. 62). Similar disposition was made by the Court of Appeals of an appeal from another judgment of the District Court for statutory damages and restitution (R. 55), in which the complaint filed (R. 45) was in all essentials like the one discussed above, except that it alleged overcharges for the period September 7, 1946, to March 12, 1947, which was not covered by the earlier complaint (R. 65). Petitioners seek review here of both judgments, and raise the same objections regarding each.

ARGUMENT

The Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, 56 Stat. 23, 58 Stat. 632, 59 Stat. 306, 50 U.S.C. App. 901, et seq., expired by its own terms on June 30, 1946, the Congress having failed to extend the Act by that date. On July 25, 1946, the Congress enacted the Price Control Extension Act, reviving and extending the then expired Emergency Price Control Act until June 30, 1947. Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act, infra, pp. 13-14, provided that the extension of the Price Control Act was effective as of June 30, 1946, and that all regulations and orders issued under the Emergency Price Control Act, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, were in effect in the same manner and effect as if the Extension Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946, except that acts and omissions occurring between June 30, 1946, and the date of enactment should not be deemed to be violations of the Emergency Price Control Act, as amended, or of any regulations or orders issued thereunder. Thus, the Price Control Extension Act caused the Emergency Price Control Act, and the regulations issued thereunder which were effective on June 30, 1946, to be retroactively in full force and effect, with the exception noted during the interim period, and also placed the said Act and Regulations in full force and effect prospectively as of July 25, 1946.

Petitioners contended that Section 18 should be interpreted as not making the Rent Regulation effective as to them unless and until the Price Administrator should reissue it. Both the District Court and the court below rejected petitioners' interpretation of the section. The Court below pointed out (R. 63), "Congress thus made clear in the proviso above quoted that it did not intend the Extension Act to be retroactive in the sense of rendering illegal the receipt of rents which had been lawfully collected during the interregnum period" (R. 63). If, however, the landlord raised his rents during the brief period of no control, such rents on and after July 25, 1946, were rolled back to the maximum rentals in existence on June 30, 1946, pursuant to the Regulation in effect at that time. Petitioners' liability in this case arose solely because they failed to adhere to these lawful maximum rentals on and after July 25, 1946, but, on the contrary, demanded and received from each tenant, for the use and occupancy of his respective apartment, $2.00 per week over and above the lawful maximum rent which had been in effect up to the lapse of rent control on June 30, 1946. The constitutionality of this extension of the Emergency Price Control Act was upheld by this Court in Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U.S. 100. See also Porter v. Shibe, 158 F. 2d 68 (C.A. 10); Porter v. Merhar, 160 F. 2d 397 (C.A. 6); Woods v. Schmid, 164 F. 2d 981 (C.A. 5).

1. Petitioners contend that the court below misconstrued the proviso clause of Section 18 in failing to give due consideration to "Congressional intention and administrative understanding" that changes in the terms of a tenancy taking place between June 30, 1946, and July 25, 1946, should remain in force until changed by administrative order. In other words, they assert that before the Rent Regulation could become effective after the Price Control Act was passed, there was a duty imposed upon the Administrator by the Congress to issue a specific order nullifying the acts which occurred during the decontrol period, and to re-issue the Rent Regulation which was in effect on June 30, 1946. As the District Court said in its opinion (R. 14):

A sufficient answer to the defendants' proposal is that insofar as it concerns the situation in the instant case no order was needed. The reenactment revitalized the pertinent regulation which was in effect on June 30, 1946, and an additional order would add nothing to its force and extent.

Petitioners observe that the Price Administrator did issue certain amendments to provisions of the regulations which were in effect on June 30, 1946, and they contend that it was necessary to re-issue each of the other provisions of the regulation. We submit that the contention is plainly without substance. The reviving Act brought the Rent Regulation as it existed on June 30, 1946, into full force and effect prospectively as of July 25, 1946, and reissuance by the Price Administrator would have been superfluous and wholly unnecessary.

2. Petitioners further contend that the interpretation placed on the Price Control Extension Act renders that Act unconstitutional in that it permits discrimination between persons similarly situated and having the same property rights, without an adequate basis for the discrimination. Petitioners assert that those outside defense-rental areas are permitted to receive an adequate return on their property, while those within defense-rental areas may not be permitted to receive an adequate return, and that the Act as interpreted fails to provide a method for correcting this discrimination (Pet. 11-12). Similar contentions were overruled by this Court in Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U. S. 503. See, also, Woods v. Cloyd W. Miller Company, 333 U. S. 138; Taylor v. Brown, 137 F. 2d 654 (E.C.A.), certiorari denied, 320 U. S. 787. Consequently, the constitutional issue which petitioners advance with respect to discrimination has already been resolved against their contentions. This likewise forecloses petitioners' contention that the court below failed to follow the rule of construction that where a statute is susceptible of two interpretations, one which leaves its validity clear, and the other which raises doubts thereof, the interpretation must be adopted which favors validity. In addition, there is no substance in petitioners' statement that the "Act fails to provide a method for correcting this discrimination.” As the court below pointed out, petitioners might have been entitled to administrative relief under one of the adjustment provisions of the Regulation, or they could have filed a protest against the Regulation as applied to themselves under Section 203(a) of the Emergency Price Control Act (R. 67). If their protest was denied, petitioners could have applied to the Emergency Court of Appeals for purposes of passing upon the validity of the Regulation (Sec. 204(d) of the Act, 50 U.S.C. 924(d)); Yakus v. United States, 321 U.S. 414, 429; Bowles v. Willingham, supra; Woods v. Hills, 334 U.S. 210.

3. Petitioners’ also contend that the Act as interpreted by the court below constitutes an improper assumption by Congress of judicial power. Petitioners’ argument that Congress, in enacting Section 18, usurped a function which it ordinarily commits to the charge of an administrative agency, is so patently lacking in merit as to require no answer. Obviously, in reviving the Rent Regulation which was in effect on June 30, 1946, Congress did not in any way exercise judicial functions, but purely legislative functions.

Petitioners’ attempt to distinguish the decision of this Court in Fleming v. Rhodes, 331 U. S. 100, is not persuasive. In that case, Rhodes unsuccessfully contended that the effect of the Price Control Extension Act of 1946 was to divest him illegally, and others similarly situated, of vested rights under judgments of eviction obtained during the de-control period. Here, petitioners assert that the same Act illegally deprives them of the right after July 25, 1946, to collect rentals contracted for by them and their tenants during the interim period, which rentals were higher than the Rent Regulation permitted. Thus, the only distinction between the Rhodes case and the case at bar is that petitioners' alleged rights are of less significance than those present in the Rhodes case.

Finally, petitioners attempt to distinguish Bowles v. Willingham, supra, on the ground that in that case the Emergency Price Control Act was sustained as a valid exercise of the war powers of Congress, while here petitioners state that on July 25, 1946, hostilities had come to an end. This contention is answered by this Court's holding that "the cessation of hostilities does not necessarily end the war power" (Fleming v. Mohawk Wrecking & Lumber Company, 331 U. S. 111, 116; Woods v. Cloyd W. Miller Company, supra).

CONCLUSION

The decision of the court below is clearly correct. There is no conflict of decision and further review is not warranted. The petition for a writ of certiorari should therefore be denied.

APPENDIX

1. Section 18 of the Price Control Extension Act of 1946, 60 Stat. 664, 678 (note to 50 U.S.C. App. 901a), reads as follows:

Section 18. (1) The provisions of this Act shall take effect as of June 30, 1946, and (2) all regulations, orders, price schedules, and requirements under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended (except regulations or requirements under section 2(e) thereof relating to meat, flour, or coffee), and the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, which were in effect on June 30, 1946, shall be in effect in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946, and (3) any proceeding, petition, application, or protest which was pending under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, on June 30, 1946, shall be proceeded with and shall be effective in the same manner and to the same extent as if this Act had been enacted on June 30, 1946: Provided, That in any case in which the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended (except sections 204 and 205), or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended (except sections 8 and 9), or any regulation, order, or requirement under either of such Acts, prescribes any period of time within which any act is required or permitted to be done, and such period had commenced but had not expired on June 30, 1946, such period is hereby extended for a number of days equal to the number of days from July 1, 1946, to the date of enactment of this Act, both inclusive: Provided further, That no act or transaction, or omission or failure to act, occurring subsequent to June 30, 1946, and prior to the date of enactment of this Act shall be deemed to be a violation of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended, or of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under either of such Acts: Provided further, That insofar as the provisions of this Act require the Administrator to make any change in any maximum price, such provisions shall not be deemed to require such change to be made before the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this Act.

2. The pertinent provisions of the Rent Regulation for Housing (8 F.R. 7323) read as follows:

Section 1. Scope of this regulation. (a) Housing and defense-rental areas to which this regulation applies.—This regulation applies to all housing accommodations within each of the defense-rental areas and each of the portions of a defense-rental area (each of which is referred to hereinafter in this regulation as the “defense-rental area”), which are listed in Schedule A of this regulation, except as provided in paragraph (b) of this section.

In Schedule A, “the maximum rent date” and “the effective date of regulation” is given for each defense-rental area listed. * * * Wherever the words “the maximum rent date” or the words "the effective date of regulation" are referred to in this regulation, the dates given in Schedule A for the particular defense-rental area or portion of the defense-rental area in which the housing accommodations are located shall apply. * * *.

Section 4. Maximum rents. Maximum rents (unless and until changed by the Administrator as provided in section 5) shall be:

(a) Rented on maximum rent date.—For housing accommodations rented on the maximum rent date, the rent for such accommodations on that date.

SCHEDULE A—DEFENSE-RENTAL AREAS

| Name of defense-rental area | State | County or counties in defense-rental area under Rent Regulation for Housing | Maximum rent date | Effective date of regulation | Date by which registration statement to be filed (inclusive) |
